Abstract

This research paper explores themes of the self perception through in the novel The old man and the sea and A Farewell to arms are two significant novels that reflect his distinctive writing style and major themes such as courage, struggle, love, loss, and the impact of suffering on human life. Though different in setting and storyline, both novels present the inner strength of individuals facing harsh realities. The old man and the sea narrates the story of Santiago, an aged Cuban fisherman who struggles against nature in his attempt to catch a giant marlin after a long period of failure. The novel symbolizes human perseverance and dignity in the face of defeat. Santiago's battle with the marlin and later with the sharks represents man's eternal struggle against natural forces. Through simple language and powerful symbolism, Hemingway highlights themes of endurance, isolation, and the indomitable human symbolism Farewell to arms is a war novel set during World War I and follows the life of Frederic Henry, an American ambulance driver in the Italian army. The novel explores the brutal realities of war and its psychological effects on individuals. Alongside war, Hemingway presents a tragic love story between Frederic Henry and Catherine Barkley, showing how love becomes a temporary refuge from chaos and destruction. The novel reflects disillusionment with war and the inevitability of suffering and loss. Together, these novels reveal Hemingway's belief that life involves struggle and pain, yet humans must face challenges with courage and grace. Both works emphasize realism and emotional restraint, making them enduring masterpieces of modern American literature.

Introduction

Human life is often defined by struggle, suffering, and perseverance. Literature frequently reflects these experiences by portraying characters who face hardships and overcome them with courage and determination. The works of Ernest Hemingway are well known for presenting realistic depictions of human endurance. His novels The Old Man and the Sea and A Farewell to Arms portray characters who confront physical pain, emotional suffering, and the harsh realities of life. Through the characters Santiago and Frederic Henry, Hemingway explores the themes of struggle, perseverance, and the resilience of the human spirit. Both works demonstrate that true heroism lies not in victory but in the courage to endure suffering.

Human Struggle in The Old Man and the Sea:

The Old Man and the Sea, Santiago represents the struggle of an individual against nature and fate. He is an old fisherman who has gone eighty four days without catching a fish. Despite the ridicule and pity of others, Santiago refuses to give up his profession or his dignity. His determination reflects the universal human struggle against failure and loneliness. Santiago's perseverance is clearly expressed in one of the most famous lines in the novel "But man is not made for defeat. A man can be destroyed but not defeated."(TOMS 103)

This line expresses Hemingway's philosophy that human beings may suffer loss or destruction, but their spirit cannot be defeated. Santiago continues to struggle even when he is physically exhausted and wounded. The giant marlin he catches becomes a symbol of the great challenges individuals face in life.

This line expresses Hemingway's philosophy that human beings may suffer loss or destruction, but their spirit cannot be defeated. Santiago continues to struggle even when he is physically exhausted and wounded. The giant marlin he catches becomes a symbol of the great challenges individuals face in life. Another moment that reveals Santiago's determination occurs when he reminds himself of his strength "I will show him what a man can do and what a man endurance."(TOMS66)

This statement shows Santiago's determination to prove his courage and endurance. Even though he is old and alone in the sea, he believes in his ability to overcome difficulties. Throughout the novel, Santiago's physical suffering represents the harsh realities of life. His hands are cut by the fishing line, and he experiences severe exhaustion. Yet he refuses to surrender.

Santiago's struggle with the marlin lasts for several days, symbolizing the persistence required to achieve one's goals. Even when sharks attack the marlin and destroy the fish he worked so hard to catch, Santiago continues to fight them with determination. Despite losing the flesh of the fish, Santiago's perseverance gives him moral victory. The skeleton of the marlin becomes a symbol of his heroic struggle. His journey proves that true success lies not in material gain but in courage and determination. At one point Santiago reflects on the meaning of endurance: "A man can be destroyed but not defeated."(TOMS 103)This statement reinforces the central theme of perseverance and demonstrates that human dignity remains intact even in defeat.

Struggle in A Farewell to Arms:

While The Old Man and the Sea focuses on the struggle against nature, A Farewell to Arms explores the struggle of individuals during war. The novel follows Frederic Henry, an American ambulance driver serving in the Italian army during World War.The brutality of war creates intense physical and emotional suffering for Frederic. He witnesses violence, death, and chaos, which gradually change his perspective on life. One of the most powerful lines that expresses the impact of suffering is "The world breaks everyone and afterward many are strong at the broken places." (FTA 249)

This quote suggests that suffering is unavoidable, but it can also create resilience and strength. Frederic's experiences during the war force him to confront the harsh realities of life. Frederic also becomes disillusioned with the idea of heroism in war. At one point he reflects on the emptiness of patriotic language.

Frederic's greatest struggle occurs not only in war but also in his personal life. His love for Catherine Barkley becomes a source of hope during the chaos of war. However, their relationship is ultimately marked by atherine dies during childbirth, Frederic experiences profound grief and loneliness. His emotional pain reflects the tragic dimension of human existence. At the end of the novel, Frederic quietly leaves the hospital after Catherine's death "It was like saying goodbye to a statue." (FTA332) This line emphasizes the emptiness and sorrow Frederic feels. Despite this devastating loss, Frederic continues living, demonstrating the theme of perseverance in the face of tragedy.

Comparative Analysis :

The Old Man and the Sea and A Farewell to Arms portray characters who struggle against overwhelming challenges. However, the nature of their struggles differs significantly. Santiago's struggle is primarily physical and symbolic. He battles the forces of nature and his own physical limitations. Frederic Henry, on the other hand, faces psychological and emotional struggles caused by war and personal loss.

Despite these differences, both characters demonstrate perseverance and resilience. Santiago fights the marlin and the sharks even when he knows he may lose. Frederic endures the horrors of war and the tragedy of losing Catherine. Through these characters, Hemingway suggests that human dignity lies in the ability to endure suffering. Frederic's struggle is both physical and psychological. He witnesses the brutality and chaos of war, which ultimately leads him to question its purpose. Hemingway expresses the harsh reality of war through Frederic's reflection.

Conclusion:

In conclusion, the theme of human struggle and perseverance is central to both The Old Man and the Sea and A Farewell to Arms. Through the characters of Santiago and Frederic Henry, Ernest Hemingway portrays the resilience of the human spirit in the face of hardship.

Santiago's battle with the marlin represents the struggle against nature and personal limitations, while Frederic's experiences in war highlight the emotional and psychological challenges of human life. Although both characters face defeat and suffering, they demonstrate courage and perseverance.

Ultimately, Hemingway suggests that true strength lies not in avoiding struggle but inconfronting it with dignity and endurance. These novels continue to inspire readers by reminding them that perseverance is an essential part of the human experience.
